Battles in the air were part of the Battle of Britain which took place in the skies above Hampshire and the south coast. The Luftwaffe was the German air force and had over 2000 planes. The main target was the port of Southampton and the island of Wight. The German pilots were looking for the docks and the docks were in the middle of the town of Southampton. The Lufts were flying from France over the English Channel, and the pilots were looking for their targets. They would fly over the town, drop bombs and return to their base.

The Battle of Britain was fought along the coast and dogfights were often fought out over the Hampshire Downs. Again, the area was a battlefield and the pilots were looking for their targets. They would fly over the town, drop bombs and return to their base.
